Question:

A 60 year-old physician owns his own practice, equipment valued at over $500,000, and the building that houses his practice. There are two other professional medical suites in the building that rent space from him. What entity structure is most likely to protect this doctor's assets?

- Sole proprietorship. Keep everything in the doctor's name since he is retiring in 5 years and lawsuits don't happen when you're close to retirement.
- One entity for the practice and equipment and another for the building.
- One entity for the goodwill of the practice (S-corp), one for the equipment (LLC or FLP), one for each medical suite (3 LLCs), and a property management entity (1 LLC)
- A living trust that is funded with all the assets listed
